Doniphan, Ripley county, October 26th—L. H. Davis and Marshall Arnold.
Piedmont, Wayne county, October 26th—J. D. Fox and M. L. Clardy.
Greenville, Wayne county, October 27th—W. T. Leeper, C. D. Yancey and J. N. Morrison.

The Maine result, according to the Republican managers, is not owing so much to the voting as the counting.

The Republicans of the First District have pitted "Gov. Tom" Fletcher against Mart. Clardy, and all that is needed to assure his election is a sufficiency of Republican votes. Now, if Count Rodman ruled the roost, as of yore, he could manufacture them at short notice; in his absence, we would not advise Gov. Tom. to close out his practice just yet.

The average colored politician does not care to emigrate to Iowa, rock-ribbed in its Republicanism though the State is. There is no room for him there. With all their ultra Republican views it has never occurred to the ruling party in the State that the negro might make a good officeholder, and they take especial pains to see that he does not get office. They carry this color so far as to forbid by statute any colored man from being a member of the Legislature, fearing, doubtless, that one might occasionally slip into that body, as all other places are closed to him.

That a man of the reputation of Senator Blaine for political astuteness should acknowledge that he has been outgeneraled is somewhat remarkable. This is what he does in his own dispatch to Garfield, however. Four days before the election the Republicans had completed their canvass and were certain of not less than 6,000 majority. They had spent vast sums of money and were confident of the result. Nothing remained but to count out the votes, when, presto! the plans of the Democratic Executive Committee unfolded. The State swarmed with speakers, and the mightier dollar was not lacking (according to Mr. Blaine) to second their efforts. The Republican majority soon dwindled away, and when the votes were counted they were found to be in a minority. It is hardly necessary for the Maine Senator to say that this result was a surprise to him. So confident had he been of his superior management and the large sums at his disposal that he had informed the country that Davis would have a majority of not less than 10,000. The actual result is not only crushing to the Republicans as a party, but disposes of Blaine's pretensions to superior political skill. He has been over-matched and is forced to admit the fact. Senator Barnum and the Democratic Committee deserve the compliment conveyed by Blaine's admission.

General John McDonald, in the title page to his book, promised to furnish the missing link in the DeGolyer transaction. He described a drive with General O. E. Babcock in October, 1874, during which the latter assured him, he says, that the District of Columbia ring had everything fixed, having General Garfield where they could use him, and adding: "Garfield is one of those easy, clever fellows, who don't want much. We gave him an elegant residence on I street, which we furnished throughout very finely, and this seems to content him."

"I feel so confident," said an exultant Democrat in New York the other evening, "that Hancock is going to be elected President that I don't worry myself about the results any longer. Why, the other evening I was in a company of eight gentlemen, every one of them Republicans, who, when polled, said they were going to vote for Hancock." "That's no criterion," said the Republican to whom the remarks were addressed. "Eight Republicans can't make a President." "May be so," was the sharp reply; "but eight Republicans did make a President three and a half years ago." The Republican is still pondering.

It is stated that Nast's terrible cartoon attack upon Gen. Garfield is to be used as a Democratic campaign document. The Brooklyn Eagle gives the information. The cartoon was published in February, 1873, when everybody was "going for" Garfield, and now the Democrats expect to reproduce it by the hundred thousand. As the matter in Harper's Weekly is copyrighted there will probably be some lawsuits about the right to copy without the permission of the original publishers, but it is argued that a lawsuit to suppress the reissue would make the impression still more favorable to the Democrats, and that even if heavy damages were awarded it would, nevertheless, be worth the risk in a party light.

The attempt of the Maine Republicans to cover up their transparent doctoring of the returns from remote precincts by the statement that Democratic frauds are expected in Aroostook county is exceedingly bald and will deceive no one. Senator Blaine will lose much of his reputation for astuteness by lending himself to it. The Democratic National Committee expose the Republican scheme, and support the exposure by facts and figures that carry conviction with them. It is outside of any reasonable supposition that the Republicans should have gained at all points inaccessible by telegraph and should have lost in those portions of the State bisected with the electric wires. With all their figuring they have not yet been able to secure a majority for Davis, and are not likely to on the face of the official returns. It may be assumed that the frauds already perpetrated will be exposed, as well as any that may be attempted after the official figures are received at Augusta.

Notwithstanding Congressman Beltzhoover's indignant denial that he wrote the pension letter attributed to him, and in the face of the fact that he has declared that said letter is an "infamous forgery" the Philadelphia Press and the New York Tribune stick to their original statements. The Tribune, to show its mendacious enterprise, publishes a fac-simile of the letter. What purpose can an "infamous forgery" serve? This is not the Louisiana case. A deliberately forged State certificate, prepared at the instance of Republicans, with the aid of Republican votes, gave Rutherford B. Hayes a fraudulent title to the Presidential office. That is an undisputed fact. But Congressman Beltzhoover's word is as good as his bond. His personal and official integrity have never been questioned. He enjoys the esteem of the people of his district, yet Republican journals outside his district indorse an "infamous forgery" to secure, if possible, some little advantage in a desperate struggle for political life.
